SERIES: 19066

1

TITLE: Non-historical project field books

DATES: 1996-

ARRANGEMENT: Alphanumerical by project number

ANNUAL ACCUMULATION: 75.00 cubic feet.

DESCRIPTION:

These books, culled from the valuable project field books, series 6764, contain the survey notes, drawings, and daily diary entries of the project engineer assigned to a particular project, but they do not have long-term value to the design and construction of future projects. Much of the information they contain is duplicate data found on the highway as-constructed plans, series 6658. Project engineers are assigned the responsibility of determining whether any field book in question is of long-term value. Each project has a set of color-coded books which note a project's stage of progress and any other information the project manager records. These books include drawings, survey notes, structure notes, elevation statistics, townships and other areas involved, weather conditions, project numbers, and the engineer's daily notes on the progress of the project. The brown and beige field books contain information on the construction of the project, the green books contain information on the structures involved, the red books are the engineers' diaries, and the blue books contain miscellaneous notes related to the project. In 1998, an electronic version of the field books was developed. These records are part of the Project Development Business System (PDBS) database managed by UDOT.

TITLE: Road construction project field books

ARRANGEMENT: Numerical by assigned field book number

ANNUAL ACCUMULATION: 10.00 cubic feet.

DESCRIPTION:

These books contain the survey notes, drawings, and daily diary entries of the project engineer assigned to a particular project. The books serve as resource and back up documents for several phases of the project, including payroll, material acquisition, and changes in the design plans. These records include drawings, survey notes, structure notes, elevation statistics, townships and other areas, weather conditions, project numbers, and the engineer's daily notes on the progress of the project. This information is now part of the Project Development Business System (PDBS) Database managed by UDOT.
